

Example of Release Train Engineer Job Description

Our company is hiring for a release train engineer. If you are looking for an exciting place to work, please take a look at the list of qualifications below.

Responsibilities for release train engineer

- Work with Product Management, Product Owners, and other relevant stakeholders to ensure alignment between strategy/roadmap and execution
- Facilitate with system/solution demos as appropriate
- Actively participate in evaluation of potential peers and assisting with onboarding of new peers, as needed
- Participate fully in walkthroughs and process audits as required
- Working with team technical writers and other stakeholders, ensure appropriate technical documentation is produced and maintained at all points in the process
- Pursue continuous improvements based on lessons learned and evolving industry best practice
- Facilitates release planning readiness
- Act as an Execution lead closely partnering with the Product Manager & IT Delivery Owner to guide one agile release train
- The report shall be completed as needed and when requested by the assigned TOM or Program Manager
- Provide product management support services including, but not limited to, the development of business architectures, business/requirements analysis, and supporting and/or performing business/product owner functions for projects when requested by the assigned TOM or Program Manager at a sub task level

Qualifications for release train engineer

desired

- In-depth knowledge of IT concepts, strategies and methodologies and their application to business opportunities - will be working with teams focused on web services and internet portal for external customers
- Escalate urgent issues appropriately and driving them to resolution in a timely manner
- 10+ years of practical experience as part of full stack application development process (Agile release train ARTS)
- 3+ years of practical experience managing release trains under Agile preferably SAFe (Scale of Agile Framework)
- Understanding of offer strategy and ability to identify Solutions opportunities